"A building is not a sentence, which in principle has the ability to match and express a thought closely. It is not linear, like language. Compared to the fluidity of words, a building is atrociously clumsy, but it can be lived and inhabited as books cannot be." ? Rowan Moore, Why We Build

Rowan Moore (Author of Why We Build) — Goodreads

You could argue that it's bleedin' obvious why we build. At a functional, individual level we build for shelter. At a societal level there is a need for shared civic buildings. Beyond that it's a matter of typology: the demands of a factory are not the same as the demands of an art gallery. But over all this is something else, and this is what Moore explores with insight and wit: the DESIRE to build.

Book review: Why We Build by Rowan Moore | New Humanist

The pursuit of iconicity is one of Rowan Moore's great bugbears in Why We Build, which opens with the spectacle of Dubai and its withered fronds of development.

Why We Build by Rowan Moore: review — Telegraph

In Why We Build Rowan Moore explores the making of buildings from conception to inhabitation and reveals the paradoxical power of architecture: it looks fixed and solid, but is always changing in response to the lives around it. Moving across the globe and through history, through works of folly, beauty, spectacle, and subtlety, Moore gives a ...
